

Outreach to Teach Reflection

On April 17, 2010, I went to Reelsville Elementary School in order to help rebuild and update a school. I completed over seven and a half community service hours. I helped repaint their gym, clean the hallways, repaint the hallways, rebuild some bookshelves for the library, restock library shelves, organize classrooms and bring in school supplies, clean all floors, landscape the front of the building, and give them a flag pole. This school did not have very much before my group and I got started. As Manchester College and all future teachers should, I value service orientation. If I were one of the teachers or students in that building, I would be very thankful for everything that was done. I was a part of a major school renovation and updating. Students in this building can now have a better education and the teachers are now able to offer that for them. I am very proud to say that I had something to do with this impact.
