

He didn't want to tell his wife and children, but he was getting that sinking feeling that something bad was going to happen. In fact, it was like he knew it. Wait, what was he doing? He was giving up.

All of a sudden there was a huge thud sound from upstairs. Then Nat remembered the children's bedroom. He had completely forgotten. Then they heard the sound of wings fluttering in the darkness.

The children started to cry and Nat could hear his wife start to whimper. Nat grabbed them all and hid in a corner, the only spot where he could find

Then all of a sudden the birds flew in circling around the room. Then, as if someone had flipped a switch all the birds dropped to the ground, dead. Nat and his wife and children sat there dumbstruck.

After a while they got up and headed for outside. Nat slowly opened the door. Every single bird was on the ground dead as a doornail. Others started to come out too. Surprised as the next.